This week marks the one year anniversary of the attack on the U.S. Capitol. With the January 6th Commission in full swing and a number of events planned for the anniversary, the following experts are available to provide commentary and analysis for reporters working on related stories.

Sophie Bjork-James

Vanderbilt University
Dr. Bjork-James is a cultural anthropologist with over ten years of experience researching both the US based Religious Right and the white nationalist movements. She is the author of The Divine Institution: White Evangelicalism’s Politics of the Family (2021) and the co-editor of Beyond Populism: Angry Politics and the Twilight of Neoliberalism (2020). Her research shows that over-throwing democracy is often a goal of far-right movements, and understands the January 6th insurrection as a successful expansion of this goal into a broader conservative movement.

Jennifer Earl

University of Arizona

Dr. Earl is an expert on police-protester interactions, including on changes in model protest policing practices, police preparation for protest events, the arrest and trial of protesters, and the consequences of policing on protesters and radicalization processes.

Erica Frantz

Michigan State University

Dr. Frantz specializes in authoritarian politics, with a focus on democratization, conflict, and development. She has published seven books on dictatorships and development, including Authoritarianism: What Everyone Needs to Know (Oxford University Press) and How Dictatorships Work (Cambridge University Press).

Amy Fried

University of Maine

Dr. Fried is co-author of the 2021 book, "At War With Government: How Conservatives Weaponized Distrust from Goldwater to Trump." Fried's research provides a perspective on the January 6 insurrection that emphasizes Republican elites' long-term, strategic efforts to encourage distrust toward government. While employing distrust as a political weapon is meant to help Republicans, the angry right-wing base sometimes turns its wrath on its own leaders. Whatever the focus, inciting distrust and delegitimizing democratic governance proves hard to control.

Julie Mazzei

Kent State University

Dr. Mazzei's research focuses on the emergence, organization, and networks of non-state violent actors, paramilitaries specifically. Recent work looks at the emergence and subsequent shifts among right-wing non-state violent actors in Chiapas, Mexico with the evolution of neoliberal economic reforms. On-going research looks at the emergence and evolution of paramilitary groups (or “death squads”) in Iraq after the U.S. overthrow of Saddam Hussein, and in particular at the violence against academics and scientists.

Wesley S. McCann

The College of New Jersey

Dr. McCann is an expert on extremism, preventing/countering violent extremism (P/CVE), and criminal law. He is currently researching why non-state actors pursue chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear weapons; radicalization and de-radicalization pathways; how immigration impacts extremism; and the impact of the Department of Homeland Security’s 287(g) program on local crime.
