

SCHOLARS
STRATEGY NETWORK

What Do Students' Beliefs About God Have To Do With Grades and Going to College?

Ilana M. Horwitz, Tulane University of Louisiana

In America, the demographic circumstances of a child's birth substantially shape academic success. Sociologists have spent decades studying how factors beyond students' control – including the race, wealth and ZIP code of their parents – affect their educational opportunities and achievement.

But one often overlooked demographic factor is religion. The U.S. is the most devout wealthy Western democracy. Does a religious upbringing influence teens' academic outcomes?