4 Experts Available for Timely Analysis on Supreme Court Nominee

February 23, 2022

- Law & Courts
- Race & Ethnicity
- Gender & Sexuality

Dominik Doemer
Director of Communications
email
phone

President Biden is set to announce Ketanji Brown Jackson as his Supreme Court nominee to replace retiring Justice Breyer. For reporters covering this historic moment and the subsequent nomination process in Congress, the following experts are available to provide comments and analysis:

Ciara Torres-Spelliscy
Torres-Spelliscy is co-author of the study Improving Judicial Diversity and has written multiple shorter pieces on judicial diversity as well. Her work focuses primarily on the issue of money in politics and on strengthening election laws more generally.

Cedric Merlin Powell

University of Louisville Brandeis School of Law

Powell's research focuses on constitutional law, rooted in Critical Race Theory. Overarching themes in Powell's writings include the ways in which neutrality reinforces oppression and subjugation in various areas of society. Subjects of Powell's writings include the Fourteenth Amendment, affirmative action, school desegregation, the First Amendment and hate speech, and political process theory. He is completing work on a forthcoming book, Post-Racial Constitutionalism and the Roberts Court.

Anna On Ya Law

City University of New York

Unlike most law professors, political scientists view the federal courts as hybrid institutions, half legal and half political. As a political scientist who does research and teaches in federal courts, Professor Law can anchor her comments in her field's research indicating how a judge's background might influence their judicial behavior. She recently wrote on those topics for Politico about both the Amy Coney Barret appointment and Breyer's impending retirement.

Sally Kenney

Tulane University
Kenney is an expert on the importance of a diverse and representative bench, with special expertise in women judges. She is author of the book Gender and Justice: Why Women in the Judiciary Really Matter. 